

Science is all around us, from the stars in the sky to the smallest living things. By learning about science, children can develop an appreciation for the natural world and may even start to see the beauty in things they may have overlooked before.