

Outer space is full of incredible and fascinating objects, from massive black holes to tiny asteroids. By exploring these objects and their properties, children can develop an interest in science and technology, and may even be inspired to conduct their own experiments or research projects.