

New Zealand has a rich history in space exploration, with scientists and researchers contributing to various international projects. By learning about these projects, children can develop an interest in fields like astronomy, engineering, and physics, and may even be inspired to pursue careers in these areas.