

Rockets generate a lot of heat when they launch into space, which can cause problems for the rocket and its payload (the things it's carrying). Engineers use special materials like heat shields to protect the rocket from the extreme temperatures.