

Beth was studying history because she loved learning about the past. She read books and visited museums to find out more. By looking back at how people used to live, she could understand why things are the way they are now. But sometimes history was sad, like when she learned about wars and injustice. Nonetheless, she continued to be fascinated by it.