

Myths and legends are stories that have been passed down through generations, often told to explain natural phenomena, teach important lessons, or entertain audiences. They can be found in cultures all around the world, including in New Zealand.