

New Zealand is no stranger to natural disasters, with earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and floods being a common occurrence. By learning about these events and the impact they have on the environment and people, children can develop an appreciation for the resilience and adaptability of both nature and human beings.